The invention relates generally to storage systems, and more particularly, to methods and systems for managing storage volumes. Storage systems are typically employed in computer networks to store information. The information is often organized as files. The storage system generally comprises a computer with storage drives, disks, and/or other data storage components. One common arrangement for a storage system is to store a primary set of data on one or more disks and to store a mirror set of data on a separate disk or disks. The data of the mirror set is used to backup the data of the primary set. A storage system may be employed by an organization as a mass storage system 3da54e8ca3
